

FINANCIAL LITERACY GRANTS

How to Write a Proposal and Where to Find the Money

Money Starts Here

Many organizations want to include financial literacy in the programs they offer, but the challenge is in developing a workable curriculum. They need one that would be easy to implement, deliver and administer. The solution is to find the funding to purchase a turnkey financial literacy program that is already structured to comply with the various grant requirements.

First, let's define financial literacy, which is financial independence:

- The ability to make smart, confident financial decisions
- Control over day-to-day and monthly finances
- Having the means to absorb a financial shock
- To have and be on track to meet financial goals
- Having the financial freedom to make choices and enjoy life

To get the funding needed for financial literacy programs, many organizations will seek out grant funding from private foundations or local financial institutions.

WE KNOW YOU'RE BUSY!

This document contains the information you need to help you write a persuasive financial literacy grant proposal. This will also help you in your search for potential sources of funding.

The following pages include:

- Quick overview of why financial literacy is important

Why Financial Literacy?

Before we really dive in, let's take a quick look at why financial literacy is so important:

One of the glaring gaps in the education of Americans is a course on how to manage money.

The lack of financial literacy has devastating effects on individuals, families, schools, businesses, and communities. It can lead to a self-perpetuating cycle of adverse circumstances caused by the extreme lack of financial stability.

THE TRUTH IS THAT MANY PEOPLE:

1. Have never been taught basic monetary skills
2. Make uneducated, ill-informed financial decisions
3. Get repeatedly taken advantage of
4. Experience financial distress
5. Are barely existing paycheck-to-paycheck

This problem affects everyone. People are vulnerable, struggling and sometimes desperate. One bad financial decision can take years or a lifetime to overcome.

We are all in this together!

THE LACK OF FINANCIAL LITERACY:

- Limits an individual's purchasing power and ability to secure basic needs
- Leads to a financially stressed and sick workforce, which impacts business profitability
- Drains public resources AND restricts economic growth in the community

Ready, set...let's get started!

Grant Proposal Overview

The funder will most likely provide you with specific questions and guidelines for your proposal. You will want to answer their questions as fully as possible to demonstrate that your project is well thought out and focused.

Your written proposal is the only opportunity you have to put your best foot forward. Leaving the reviewers with lingering questions will do nothing but fast track your proposal to the waste bin.

There are three fundamental areas that your proposal must address:

Part 1: The Ask

Who is asking for the grant? This is where you will provide the name of your organization and a brief description of its history and mission. Emphasis should be placed on how your organization aligns with the funder's giving interests.

How much money are you requesting and over what period? List the full amount you're requesting and the period of time over which the money will be used.

Example: "Financial Help Services seeks a grant of $5,000 from the Bank Foundation for a one-year financial literacy program designed to educate youth, entitled "My Financial Academy."

Part 2: The Need

Why does your organization need the grant? This is where you state your case for needing support. In as much space as they provide, you must persuasively demonstrate the need for the program.

Example: "The Scattered Site Supportive Housing Program (SSSHP) provides transitional supportive housing for up to 36 young adults, ages 18 – 25, who have aged out of foster care and are at risk of homelessness. Participation in the SSSHP offers young adults access to affordable housing for which they pay 30% of their monthly income. It also offers support services designed to encourage and prepare them to lead fully independent lives living in a market rate apartment in the community. Their traumatic histories of abuse, neglect, and institutionalization leave these young people ill-equipped to support themselves. They are also at a high risk of falling victim to societal pressures of overspending and utilizing credit cards. The inherent transience of life in foster care limits their exposure to a solid financial role model and education. Many have already begun to accrue significant debt through the misuse of credit and educational loans. While SSSHP offers assistance with budgeting and money management, additional responsibilities of case management prevent an in-depth exploration of these incredibly important issues. Funding this proposal would address this gap in service and offer these young people a dedicated structured opportunity to prioritize and establish sound financial habits."

Part 3: Project Description

Exactly how will you handle the work of implementing the program? Where will the program take place? How often will it run? What will the program involve?

Who will do the actual work involved in the described project (personnel)? Provides names, titles, and one-line bios for each person involved in the project.

Are they qualified to do the work? If you're starting up a financial literacy program, you need someone with experience in that field, a project partner, or access to an established financial education curriculum that has been proven to be effective.

Example: "The My Financial Academy curriculum, developed by Money Starts Here, consists of user-friendly online video courses. These courses offer participants the information they need to wisely manage their finances. The curriculum also provides real-world examples that educate, empower, and create self-sufficient members of society. The lessons cater to a diverse audience and include topics such as budgeting, debt management, investing, credit score management, and more."

How will you assess the success of your project? A realistic evaluation is important to most funders. A pre-post program survey, for example, may be a good option. If possible, show how you plan to measure the impact of the program.

Example: "A pre-test survey will be administered to all SSSHP participants before starting the initiative. The survey will measure each participant's status regarding debt, savings, budgeting, and understanding of financial concepts. After the completion of the workshops, a post-test survey will be administered. Results of the pre-test will be compared with the post-test results. Improvements in scores on the post-test surveys will demonstrate the effectiveness of the initiative. Additionally, participant spending logs will be reviewed to assess the progression of spending patterns."

If the grant won't cover the entire cost of the project or if the grant is only partially awarded, where will the remaining money come from? Prepare a detailed project budget. If you're asking for $5,000 for a $10,000 project, mention that you have other sources of funding or other pending applications.

Will the impact of this project continue after the funding is gone? Is it sustainable? Many funders want to know if you are planning on returning to them year-after-year to fund the same programs.

Lastly:

Don't forget to thank the funder for their time and consideration. Also, mention how, if awarded, their gift will be publicly recognized. This could be through your newsletters, social media, or press releases.

What to look for when considering financial literacy solutions:

- Ease of Delivery:
  - Turnkey program designed to comply with various grant requirements
  - Curriculum that is consistent in its delivery and exceeds basic guidelines
  - Participants can be enrolled in a series of required courses that are easily tracked
- Effective:
  - Covers basic financial skills
  - Provides useful skills that can be immediately applied
  - Helps participants make smart decisions at pivotal moments
- Saves Time:
  - Maximizes the effectiveness and impact of a department's work
  - Reduces the coordination and administration of performance measures
  - Online courses eliminate travel time and the need to schedule/cancel and reschedule in-person classes
- Stakeholder and Administrative Reporting:
  - Easily tracks participant progress by course, group or location
  - Reporting that can be automatically scheduled and sent to multiple administrators and/or stakeholders
  - Records long-term program progress
- Participants Like It:
  - Courses use real-world examples and cover today's most important financial topics
  - Engaging and conversational
  - Content that is designed to educate, not sell products or services

Our Approach

Informative and engaging online video courses created and delivered by 25-year former banker, and Guinness World Record Financial Literacy Program creator and presenter Denise Winston.

- USER-FRIENDLY - Online courses that range from 10 minutes to 1 hour
- FOCUSED - On everyday financial skills
- EDUCATIONAL - Designed to educate not sell products or services
- ACCESSIBLE - Anywhere, anytime on any device

Vendor Selection Considerations:

- Cost of the program
- Resources needed to implement and administer the program
- How will success be tracked, measured and reported?
- How long are you willing to support the program in order to see results?
- How or if the solution competes with, supports or integrates with other programs/resources
- Will it need individualized promotion and/or education?
- Is it customizable?
- Can the program be easily scaled to reach remote locations, work schedules, and/or family members?
- Will it be inclusive and provide high value to diverse age groups, backgrounds, and cultures?
- Does it address your participants' most pressing financial difficulties?
